

BARTON GRANGE WANTS TO HELP GET BRITAIN GARDENING

Barton Grange Garden Centre has joined a national gardening campaign to encourage and support gardening projects in schools and local communities.

The campaign, 'Cultivation Street', is led by TV gardener and broadcaster David Domoney. By supporting community and school gardening projects, the campaign hopes to bring local communities together to improve their streets, public spaces and school grounds.

For one lucky community or school group who joins the 'Cultivation Street' campaign, there is even the chance to win £20,000 of gardening vouchers.

Barton Grange is supporting the campaign by nominating a Gardening Ambassador who can offer help and advice for communities and school projects.

Fred Johnstone, who has worked at Barton Grange for over 40 years, has a wealth of gardening knowledge and experience, and he's willing to share that knowledge with schools and community gardening groups.

Support could include planting advice, tips on how to attract wildlife and seasonal help on what to plant and when. Even if you're not joining Cultivation Street and you just want to improve your own outdoor space, however large or small that might be, we are happy to help.

So, if you need some advice about a gardening project in your school or local community, our Gardening

Ambassador Fred and his team are available to you by appointment, free of charge. Just contact us in advance and we'll allocate you a 30-minute session, where you can come in to chat with one of our experts.

To make an appointment, please email our Events Organiser, Emma, at events@bartongrange.co.uk.

Don't grapple with your gardening gripes, ask our gardening ambassador for advice!

For more information about Cultivation Street and how to enter the campaigns competition to win £20,000 worth of gardening vouchers, please visit: <http://www.daviddomoney.com/cultivation-street/>